About the Seminar:

Gender Discrimination since time immemorial, has been a deep rooted evil in Indian society. Though the Indian constitution has granted equal rights to all irrespective of their gender but the discriminatory attitude of people towards female could not be changed. Instill decline in sex ratio witnesses the seriousness of this evil. Increased adoption of malpractices like sex selective abortion and female infanticides are making it possible. It reflects clearly towards low status of women in the society. In rural areas the situation is relatively worse. Women are deprived of the rights to legal ownership over the land they cultivate or of other farm resources. Despite all, rural women play a significant role in domestic and other socio-economic affairs in their family. In addition to accomplishing their routine household tasks they actively participate with males in managing the agricultural and allied activities on farm. The proposed seminar has been planned to invite researchers of varied fields on a common platform to deliberate on the Gender Discrimination and Dimensions of Socio-economic Participation of Rural Women in Agrarian Sector of India. This effort would make it possible to identify reasons of such discrimination and abuses against female sect in agrarian society of India. It would help to check this social evil and enhance the potential of women to contribute for socio-economic development of the country.

Theme of the Seminar:

Major issues to be addressed in this seminar are:

1. Rural women, their socio-cultural behavior and working environment;
